Staples

A number of persons are mentioned of the name Staples who belonged to the nobility of England, and the different coats-of-arms which they bore are described. The family in Ireland had a coat-of-arms which indicates that the name originated in the idea of a staple, a stanchion, or fastening. Thomas Staples was created a baronet of Ireland in July, 1628. The crest of his coat-of-arms is described as "a demi-negro holding a bolt-staple." A branch of the family in England has upon its coat-of-arms four staples, and another three staples, all showing pretty conclusively the supposed origin of the name.

Staples

The coat-of-arms of one branch of the Staples family in England bore the motto in French, "Sans Dieu rien." "Nothing without God." As the mottoes of English families were generally in Latin, if not in their own tongue, it is probable that this motto in French indicates the French origin of those who bore it.

II ABRAHAM² First son of John¹, one of the original proprietors and settlers of Mendon, Massachusetts

Born Weymouth, October 20, 1638, was living in Dorchester in 1658,
and returned to Weymouth 1660

Married Mary Randall, daughter of Robert Randall, September 19,
1660, Weymouth, born March
20, 1642, died March 9, 1712,
Mendon

Died October 20, 1703

The Randalls came from Berks County, England.

Will of Robert Randall was made in 1691. In it he says: "I give my daughter Mary, now the wife of Abraham Staples of Mendon," etc.

Abraham made will November 22, 1698, and it was proved December 21, 1703.

Petition to the General Court by Abraham and others was granted in 1662, to plant a new town (Mendon). Abraham with eleven others purchased the estate where the village now stands. The exact date of beginning of the settlement has never been fixed, but in 1662 or 1663, as son Abraham was born here June 14, 1662. It was incorporated May 15, 1667.

During King Philip's War the families were driven off and the houses all burned.

Abraham took an active part in all that related to the establishment of the church and town. He is one of the committee who signed the agreement with the first minister; he is appointed on the committee who selects a site for a new bridge across Muddy Brook; to take a draft out of the town book of all the records which interfere, one with another, and present it to the town to rectify. He is chosen one of the selectmen, and is appointed one of the men to take a new deed of the town from the Indians.

Six years before his death he seems to have removed to Taunton; a deed of certain parcels of real estate in 1698 and his will made the same year, are dated at Taunton. His son Jacob had removed to that town soon after his marriage, about 1696. Abraham's name disappears from the tax list in Mendon in 1697 and is restored in 1700, showing an absence of three years; but that he never intended to lose his residence here is shown from the fact that though his will was made in Taunton, he speaks of his "now dwelling house" in Mendon. The will is in the probate office, Suffolk County, bearing date November 22, 1698, proved on December 21, 1703. The will gave Jacob "five shillings and lands passed to him by deed of gift.

(Ebenezer Staples was great-uncle to Everett Hosmer Barney.)

A part of the original house built by Robert Thornton, one of the first settlers of Taunton, and in which the ancestors of Everett Hosmer Barney lived for generations. Jairus Sidney Barney, father of Everett Hosmer Barney, was born here.

Panel from the original house built by Robert Thornton and in which William Barney lived and where Jairus Sidney Barney, father of Everett Hosmer Barney, was born. The decorations were restored under the directions of Mr. Everett Hosmer Barney and the panel is now in his possession.

The original house which Robert Thornton built and in which William Barney lived till the time of his death is one of the oldest houses, if not the oldest house in Berkley-Taunton, Massachusetts.

Generations have come and gone, but part of this old house still stands built with its quaint old wood work fashioned by patient hands in days when the execution by modern machinery was not dreamed of, when *nails were carefully wrought by hand, by younger members of the family, and too, when rough boards were fastened to the sides of the room, from which nails projected from the surface of the boards about an inch to hold the ponderous plaster with the decorations in color executed by hand which the elements during these years have failed to destroy. Wall papers were unknown to these early settlers. But few houses in New England can boast of such decorations.

It is the intention of Everett Hosmer Barney to restore as far as possible the quaint room—the only part remaining of the old William Barney homestead. The house is located on Staples street in Berkley-Taunton, Massachusetts.

Undoubtedly William, the Elder, was a frequent visitor at this home of his son William. Jairus Sidney Barney, father of Everett Hosmer Barney, was born here.

*NOTE.—Nails were made in the homes by hand and families took in the work of making nails as in later days it was the custom, of parts of shoes, straw hats and other articles.

Some years ago the City of Taunton changed the grade of Staples Street, removing the stone wall along the highway abutting the cemetery encroaching upon the cemetery, and rebuilt the wall upon the graves of the above. In 1910 Mr. Everett Hosmer Barney had made a careful examination of the grounds in which his ancestors were buried and has since placed a memorial tablet to mark the location.
